that the whole thing is her work. This is the view taken by the Times, which regards the revolution as a "triumph for Russian diplomacy." The events which have just happened are doubtless to the advantage of Russia; but, if Russia has triumphed, it is in a real sense, not in diplomacy. Russia had no right to wish to disturb the status quo. Her settlement had impaired, if not destroyed, her ascendancy in the Balkans, and placed another obstacle between her and the Ottoman Prince, and therefore only by uniting with Russia, besides which he had

With him it was Bulgaria for the Bulgarians, and not Bulgaria for the Russians. He was, in fact, the head of the anti-Russian party. It was, therefore, manifestly the interest of Russia to get rid of ALEXANDER, and to substitute a ruler more favourable to Russian pretensions.

Signs of a coming storm made themselves apparent several months ago. Early in June it was stated that uneasiness was felt in Europe because of the impression that Russia was meditating a coup in the Balkan Peninsula, and events which had happened before that date, and were happening at the time, pointed strongly in the same general direction. These were, for example, the military displays in Beasabala and the Crimea, and the demonstrations at the construction of the Black Sea fleet. The words used by the Czar at the launch of one of the new vessels excited much comment at the time. They were as follows:—My fulfillment of my wishes, difficult and many, will be made possible, however, only under the pressure of the armed defense of the tion was followed a few days later by a significant speech by the Mayor of Moscow, who welcomed the Czar on his return from the South, and expressed the hope and belief that "the Cross of Christ would shine upon St. Sophia." These words pointed of course to the acquisition by Russia of Constantinople, and although it was the Mayor who employed them and not the Czar, it was pointed out at the time that utterances of this sort are not made in Russia without permission. Next we had the statement

But Russia had announced her intention to meet aside the Berlin Treaty so far as it affects Batoum, which is to be no longer a free port, and is to be fortified. These were all indications of an aggressive spirit, and their significance was not diminished by the absence of the Russian Emperor from the meeting at Gastein, which was an announcement to the world that the triple alliance was at an end.

Mr. Russia had designs in Bulgaria, she could not prosecute them so long as she was in close alliance with Austria and Germany; but the dissolution of the compact left her free, and there can be no doubt that she has acted. Russian emissaries have been at work in Bulgaria, and we see the result in the revolution that has taken place. The fact that the men at home and in the countries in the East. These complications are likely to have upon the peace of Europe. It is possible that a understanding may be arrived at, for the present at all events. The Berlin Post offers the opinion that the revolution will promote peace, and it is also stated that Austria will not quarrel with Russia about Prince ALEXANDER's successor. It is these two Powers, questions affecting the control of the Balkan Peninsula. Russia wants to become the Slav power, and it is Austria's interest to prevent her attaining that object. On the other hand both Powers are eager to acquire maritime possessions in the Mediterranean—Austria at Salonica and Russia at Constantinople. They are, therefore, necessarily opposed to each other.

The question which most interests English-

Russian interests in Bulgaria, and it is pretty certain that Prince ALEXANDER has had the support of Prince BISMARCK. It does not seem likely, therefore, that the events of the last few days will be regarded with satisfaction in Germany. But if Austria should raise no objection to the appointment of a Russian nominee as su-below over. Russia may be contented for the present with having gained that point, and if Austria is satisfied, Germany may not care to object. But this is almost too easy a solution of the difficulty to be hoped for. As the matter now stands, there is plenty of ground for anxiety.

A partial cessation of work in the Supreme Court at a time when there is a very great deal of work to be done. An Act was passed two years ago which enacts that no Judge shall sit on the hearing of an appeal from his own decision, and the Court on the hearing of such appeals is to consist of three Judges, unless the parties consent to its consisting of two Judges only. When the Court assembled yesterday morning the CHIEF JUSTICE said, "My dear friends, I regret to announce. The sittings in Divorce, which occupied Mr. Justice WINDEYER yesterday, are likely to engage his attention throughout the week; Sir WILLIAM MANNING's time is fully occupied in Equity; and as Mr. Justice FAUCETT's state of health does not permit him to return at once to regular work, only two Judges are left for the Court in Banco. The Court thus constituted will be able to go on with appeals from inferior Courts, or with appeals from Mr. Justice

FAULTER of Mr. Justice WINDHAM, who professionally; but appeals from the CHIEF JUSTICE of Mr. Justice LYNES can in no case be heard. There are many cases, too, where the parties may not consent to their appeal being heard by two Judges, for the reason that if in that case the Court is divided in opinion the appeal is lost.
The first four days of this week should have been devoted to Equity appeals, but as by the Equity Act these appeals also must be heard by at least

With this week, and the choice will lie between two evils—postponing for a week all jury causes set down for next week, and appointing an Acting Judge to try the criminal cases at Darlinghurst, in order to take the Equity appeals then, or else to throw these over until November. Of the two evils, the latter is perhaps the least, although it will give the parties in the seven or eight causes set down for appeal additional ground for complaining of the law's delays.

but the postponement of the jury caused at this late stage would probably give rise to a still greater amount of inconvenience and expense. This state

RIGHT ON AUSTRALIAN RAILWAYS.

THE INTERCONTINENTAL LINE AND ADELAIDE.

I look with considerable interest," said Mr. Speight, upon the opening of the line of railway between Melbourne and Adelaide, and the fact that the line will be open as to traffic going from one colony to another, and of possibilities of loss to one or another, are not worth considering beside the larger question of bringing the two colonies into closer contact, and into contact with each other. Traffic must be allowed to take the route which it is natural for it to take. The line from Melbourne to Town to Adelaide is a very good one, and the line from Adelaide to Melbourne is well constructed, and the travelling is good. When we get a service of trains running in the direction proposed for the trip between Adelaide and Melbourne, the large passenger traffic will be increased, and the line will be a great many business people of all the Australian colonies. Certainly there is every reason why this should be so, and in meeting the colonies by railway and by splitting through fares.

What we must do to get a first-class service between Melbourne and Adelaide. The trains will be in Melbourne at 11 o'clock, and will arrive in Adelaide at 11 o'clock, and the journey will be performed in about 17 hours.

I cannot see how an intercolonial railway can be other than a benefit to the colonies. The line will be a benefit to the colonies, and will be connected by rail with the colonies. The line will be connected by rail with the colonies.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAYS.

It does not for this side any opinion as to the way for traffic to exist in the bower. If you have a considerable volume of traffic, you can afford to accept lower rates than you would otherwise take; but necessarily the rate for the far side of the bower will be higher. It is in competition with the steamers, along with a remuneration for the two colonies. Any hard-and-fast rules as to rates will prevent the railway getting a share of the traffic. It is not so with the steamers, but the railway service has the advantage of time and the avoidance of the sea passage."

MAKING RAILWAYS PAY.

The first thing to be kept in view with railways is to make them pay for themselves. It is not the business relating to the management from a purely business standpoint, and free them from influences that do not pertain to the management. The railway is a business, and it is the communities in a commercial aspect are identical, if any extraneous element is allowed to interfere with it, it cannot be expected that the railways will be successful. This question of working railways profitably affects a number of other matters, and more especially the colonies' status as borrowers. If capitalists in England know that the colonies are not able to pay for their railways, they are not interested in railways, and that the railways are paying, they fear readily to lend, and the Governments are thereby in their position at a disadvantage with the other countries.

UNIFORM GAGE ADVOCATED.

It is very important, in view of what may occur, that gage between Adelaide and Melbourne is the same, and that a pity that there is not a common gage right through the colonies, but from Albany to Sydney is 4 feet 8 1/2 inches. John Fowler told me, while he was in Australia, how strongly he felt the importance of a common gage in the colonies.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—Now that the above subject has been again breached in your columns, with, I hope, a different result than has hitherto been the case, I beg your permission to point out other cases of injustice to teachers. It strikes me as rather remarkable that teachers themselves have not moved in the matter; but the fact is they are a body without coherent action, and the teachers' union, which ought to be the organ of their action, has been for some time being almost prohibited by the powers that be, while the city teachers are, as a rule, too well off to take an active part in any movement that demands sacrifice. The teachers' union, however, at times it betokens a want of spirit, and does not speak well for them as a body when they tamely submit to be sat upon and do not, as they ought, counteract the action of the city teachers. I would the teachers of Barrows to have a voice in matters tending so deeply to their own interests and the

there are a glut of male teachers, and that, therefore, they cannot expect to be so well paid in proportion as the females. It is also pointed out that the Department has no right to admit a certain number of applicants who undergo pupillage and training. If more are passed than are required there is evidently a want of economy in paying salaries to those who have not yet been appointed. In my confession that the Department is overmanned, and that, course, is owing to the want of foresight on the part of the Department as regards the future, I am not aware that it is the part of male teachers concerning the salaries paid to female teachers, but the lack of reward for good service and experience : if some such plan has been previously proposed, I think that it would be better to increase teachers' salaries for good service, it would be far more satisfactory, even if teachers commenced at a lower salary than is now awarded. I would propose that after two years' service a salary of £105 per annum; after two years more a further rise of £128 per annum; after four years more a further rise of £169 per annum; after six years more a further rise of £175 per annum to a higher grade. This plan would encourage the industrious and deserving ; payment by classification would thus be adopted, and would not increase the cost of the Government's education system. But for now a third-class teacher commences at once at £189 per annum, no matter how young or inexperienced he may be.

Therefore, to summarise, the two leading ideas agitating teachers' minds are recognition of experience and good service, and payment of salary according to the classification of the individual, which, and not on the sliding scale of classification of the school, itself, based on the average standard, and varies according to the weather, sickness, aptitude, and persons, &c., which, I submit, is palpably unjust, and is maintained in any other form by the Government. BYRON.

AUSTRALIANS v. MIDDLESEX.

vials, but it is a most remarkable fact, considering how Evans' reputation has been talked of in this country, that he should be given so little chance. In the match against the Wanderers he was bowled by Giffen at 100, and in the first innings for 6 overs in an innings of 330, and in this match he was not put on until two men were well set and the score was 152. As it happened he bowled so well that he took 7 wickets for 60 runs. He was again called upon in this innings closed. At 153, Evans bowled a fine over, and then came back to bowl the last over of his own Walker's off stump, and the old Oxonian retired for an absolutely faultless innings of 67, the cause being that he had no more balls left. The next day, after C. O'Brien, the gentleman who will be remembered as having played so wonderfully well against the Australian team during the early part of the tour of 1893, came in next, but he did not have much chance either, as he was bowled by Trumble at 180, and with 8 runs added, got O'Brien's innings caught at point. G. B. Studd was clean bowled for 10 runs, and just as Evans was coming in to bowl a single, and just as he was about to deliver the ball, he was ridiculously easy caught by Trumble, the only excuse for which was that he had the sun right in his eyes. This was rather a pity, as still he was a trifle more than useful. The 200 went up at 5 minutes to 4, and Vernon was dismissed from a very short innings by Giffen at 220, and the score stood 232 when Vernon was finally caught in the long field by Bruce. West and Burton soon fell to Evans, and the first wicket went down for 242. Then Robertson became the batsman, and he was bowled by Giffen at 100, thus enabling the professional to reach his 100. Spillman tried rather to force the game, and, after giving a hard chance to

In the evening the Australians had one long round of entertainments. They were entertained in the members' dining pavilion at Lords by the members of the Middlesex and the Gloucestershire cricket clubs. Then, it will be remembered, rain prevented a ball being bowled, so the Marylebone Club wisely determined to postpone the match until the following day. The evening was supported by many well-known cricketers, nearly all the members of the Australian Eleven, and the Middlesex amateurs. A number of the Australians were the distinguished guests at the Guildhall, where a big reception and ball was given to the cricketers, and a concert took place at the Theatre Royal, South Kensington. These sorts of receptions are all very well in their way, but many of the team agree with me in the opinion that the only cricket which will never be forgotten by anyone who was fortunate enough to be present at Lords. For a long time it seemed as if the Australians were to have a very easy victory, but at the finish they had to fight very hard for their runs, and only proved successful by the barest possible margin. The Australians continued the Middlesex innings. Giffen and Palmer were the bowlers; but Jarvis, who had hurt his leg, had a substitute, a professional, who, however, could not be considered a success, for he let two fours go past him to the boundary. The wickets, however, were not very numerous, and the little English bowlers were said to get very much more work on the ball than they had done on either of the two previous days. At

His first short-pitch in hitting round to leg. He included seven fours, three, two twos, and two singles. The innings closed in 10 minutes to 12 for 27. Palmer took seven wickets for 100. He had certainly not bowled so well in any of the previous matches. Having only 123 runs to go to win, it was thought that the Aussies would have no difficulty in completing the task for the loss of three or four wickets. At first it seemed likely that the runs would be very soon hit off, for although Scott was well stamped at 8, Offien, Jones, and Palmer were all in the batting. But the Aussies took wicket after the score was 73. Then Garrett and Offien stayed together for some time, and the latter played extremely good cricket. His admirable innings of 82 included 10 fours and 2 sixes. He was out for 100, but not with six wickets to fall, so that the game seemed all but over. However, from this point there was a most extraordinary change in the game, and the Middlesex batsmen, who had been playing so well, were out in the match after all, played up in a manner that deserves untold praise. Garrett was caught at the wicket at 104, and on run leg. Bruce was nearly taken at the wicket at 106, and on run leg. The last of the Middlesex wickets to fall. The excitement of the spectators now became intense, and the game was watched with breathless anxiety. The Australians, who were now in the hands of Palmer, and two of them in their hands, played rather anxiously, and two or three of them went out to somewhat feeble strokes. Trumble was caught at mid-off at 109, and Palmer, who followed, nearly made a century, but was bowled by Trumble at 110. Evans gave a hard chance to Scott at mid-off, but in the same over was caught at point. Eight wickets for 110, or 8 runs to win. The Australians were now in a very bad way, and it was thought that when Palmer was caught at short-pitch, so that when Blackham, the last man, joined Pope 8 runs were

On the Tuesday Mr Hivatt was cleverly run out by Pope, who was flying as he was, and he was caught by the wicket-keeper until 171, when the latter was also caught for 49, the highest and best innings on the side. His hits were seven sixes, two threes, and six twos, and on the whole he was a very good batsman. The bowlers (except Garrett) did not do much. Evans being the best, and the credit of the Australians' first innings. Watson's bowling was not very good.

At five minutes to 1 the English team commenced their second innings 37 runs to the bad, and at the luncheon interval 22 runs to the bad. The first 10 minutes of the match were very even wicket to fall. Up to this time Spofforth was the best bowler, and he was the only bowler who had not got one wicket off Fifteen two, W. H. Patterson being not out 22, a really good score under the difficult circumstances.

After luncheon on Tuesday came the sensational part of the match. It had been hoped for the sake of Howard's innings that the match would not be finished until 12.50, and Giffen dismissed the side in half an hour for only 15 runs runs; 12 overs and two balls were left to be bowled, and Giffen was the only bowler who had not got one wicket for two runs. The South Australians played into the broken trivet, and was as nearly as possible a 100 runs to the bad. The match was a very close one, and it fell with a rapidity that soon disappointed all interest in the game, and at 20 minutes past 3 in the afternoon Lord March's clerk was out for 65, leaving the Scott was clean bowled at the first ball, and Jones, just as he looked like carrying out his bat, was bowled when the game was in a difficult position. The result was 145 to 115, and the match ended in a victory for the Australians by eight wickets. I might mention that play only lasted two hours and a half on Tuesday, and in that time fifteen wickets fell for 122 runs. Of course this was a brilliant performance on the part of the Australians, but the condition of the ground was unavailing for the sudden break-up of the game. The following is the full score:-
